The police are still having a good deal of work carrying out the order of the city council to keep the crowds moving on Main street and to prevent the congregating of men on street corners and steps. Once or twice people have been ordered not to loiter on their own steps and for a moment they resented the matter. On second thought they decided that the idea was so commendable that they wouldn't block it by their own persistence. These warm evenings the crowds took refuge on the lawn in the city hall park but were also dislodged from there.
